BURNING of human and animal remains has been adopted by the American people during the 1940's, says the U.S. Nat. Bur. of Health. In fact, the burning of single human skeletons in the United States, started some 20 years ago, has become common and, possibly, permanent. Legions of men killed in World War I, Remains of soldiers in the Civil War, and even the remains of the Civil War, have been and are being burned by the thousands.

The most direct link to Brazil took place from the 1940s to 1960s, when a number of well-known Brazilian artists came to the United States to work and live. Among them were the famous modernist painter Tarsila do Amaral, who lived in New York from 1940 to 1945, and the composer Heitor Villa-Lobos, who lived in New York from 1940 to 1945. Other Brazilian artists who came to the United States include the architect Oscar Niemeyer, who lived in New York from 1940 to 1945, and the writer Jorge Amado, who lived in New York from 1940 to 1945. The Brazilian influence on American art and culture was significant, and it is still felt today.

Record Supplies

The phonograph record business made the headlines recently with the issuance of a prohibition order limiting the use of shellac. This order (M-106) is general in its terms and the use of shellac in phonograph records is only a part of the many provisions of the order.

The order does not apply directly to the production of records but does limit the use of shellac in records. Records may still be made in any quantity if substitutes are available.

The Wall Street Journal, in reporting the news of the shellac order, was careful to devote an entire paragraph to explaining that the order is not likely to cut down record production so much as it might first appear. It explained that record manufacturers have for some time been experimenting with substituting for shellac. "While the industry hopes its formulas as secret as its sales figures," reports indicate that successful substitutes and methods of using less shellac in phonograph record manufacture have been found. In addition the industry has been successfully reclaiming old records," says The Journal.

That there will be some adverse conditions resulting from the shortages and limitations of shellac goes without saying. Record manufacturers will soon be announcing their plans to cope with the situation and to keep the supply of records as complete as possible.

We publish in the phonograph section this week a warning that music operators had best hold on to their supplies of old records because there is a possibility that it may eventually be necessary to turn in an old record as order to purchase a new one. This suggestion should be followed until further announcements are made as to future supplies of records.

In any adverse situation there are also new responsibilities and new opportunities. If any shortage develops in the supply of records it will serve to focus attention upon records and their place in our national life as never before. Sometimes a scarcity of something is the thing that makes it become all the more important. Popular records have come to fill a great place in supplying the people with music, but many may not realize how irreplaceable such records are until the future supply is threatened.

If a shortage should develop, then automatic phonographs will have a big responsibility to the people and to the music world to help supply popular music in these thousands of small establishments that have made music a part of their attraction to customers. With businesses already closed on phonographs and radios for the hour, these small public establishments will need more than ever to maintain their popular music.

Small establishments are sure to be hit harder and harder as the war continues, and the increasing adversity will make music mean all the more to the owners of these places and also to the people who patronize them.

Music operators and record manufacturers must take seriously the job of helping to maintain the national morale. The music industry has talked a lot about helping to maintain morale and the real test may come when adverse conditions begin to come home in the music industry itself. Closer cooperation between music operators and the record manufacturers and distributors will help to overcome many of the difficulties that arise in the record field.

If the supply of records decreases there will be less recorded music for the home, and the public phonographs will need to fill in the gap. The public phonograph can maintain the present high state of public interest in popular music for the duration, a service that will enable the music industry to assume full business activity soon after victory is won. The opportunity thus presented to the phonograph industry may be the biggest opportunity that has yet come its way.

Present trends are already helping to remove certain competitive ends from the phonograph industry, and the trend will offer better counts to all operators who adapt themselves to new opportunities and who fulfill their obligation to supply the best music services that conditions permit. Record manufacturers and distributors share in this opportunity to maintain the best possible music service to public phonographs for the duration.

No one in the music business questions the necessity of the prohibition order. In the April 4 issue of The Billboard we published a notice that shellac had important uses in military and naval equipment and that a prohibition order was planned. Now the phonograph and record industry will show its ability to carry on and also help win the war.

Good sport for many shows is record to shellac source and for other ways to able to take the with are at the record machine and at the record from the St. Louis (Times)

A number of large-scale trials have shown that the use of a low-dose aspirin can reduce the risk of heart disease. The study was published in the New England Journal of Medicine in 1989. The study was a randomized, controlled trial that involved 17,000 patients. The patients were divided into two groups: one group received a low-dose aspirin (81 mg) daily, and the other group received a placebo. The study found that the group receiving the aspirin had a significantly lower risk of heart disease compared to the placebo group. The study also found that the aspirin group had a lower risk of stroke and a lower risk of death from heart disease. The study was a landmark study that established the benefits of low-dose aspirin for the prevention of heart disease.

Automatic music is usually associated with entertainment and fun . . . and rightly so! Yet, automatic music has a very serious job to do . . . and a job that it is doing. That big job is keeping up morale . . . so necessary . . . when every real American is intent upon achieving a victory. Automatic music is universal in its appeal . . . automatic music with its wide selection of patriotic tunes is inspirational . . . from Whistla-Stop to Broadway . . . night and day . . . there is no other morale "lifter upper" that is so accessible and within a cost that all can afford.
